s bq eL-UbZMnJLL Canon Powershot Camera GT I knew that the trigger time was about 0.22sec but thought it could be better because it was done in a hurry, so I checked out the PTP, found out that I can tweak some setting to the maximum, and as you can see, the results are amazing. @Russel Zaree – Yes, it can be difficult at times. It helps to have a buddy to check with. For instance, I'm not very good at taking outdoor shots in the dark, but have a hard time at the park because I'm in such a huge crowd that I can't get the right composition. A buddy would be invaluable at these situations. But when it comes to in-app purchase, the prices are very fair. What I got for £2.99 was more than I expected. It also has a long list of other good stuff, including editing, but I'm pretty happy with the basic functionality of this app. @Sanda I'm glad you are satisfied with it! :) When it comes to editing, you can create filters. So if you don't like the composition, just adjust the filter for a different look. Hello Rakesh, Thanks for your time to reply! Is there some tools in iOS8 that can allow to control exposure on a camera? In my previous post I used a tripod and remote trigger. It worked, but not so good exposure. Does your tool give more control on exposure than with a tripod and remote trigger? Thanks for any help. @Rakesh: I'm sorry I missed this comment while I was offline. I think there is a setting for exposure on your camera. When I use my camera, I set the exposure to manual mode (I'm sure your camera will have this option). At any rate, I think the app will give you a good exposure. And if it doesn't, you could always edit the images on your phone. I just googled "Canon iX500" and found out what I needed. I used to use my Dad's camera but I don't really have that much patience when it comes to taking shots. I've been using my iPhone's camera for this purpose. It's 82157476af
